The Master of Fine Arts degree is designed to meet the needs of those who wish to pursue the study of art for a career as a professional artist and college-level instructor. The program consists of professional study in painting, photography, digital media, graphic design, illustration, sculpture, ceramics, printmaking, metalsmithing/jewelry, and interdisciplinary media. M.F.A. students are encouraged to attend full time, but may attend part time for part or all of their degree work. The M.F.A. student enrolled full time also maintains a residency in the Department of Art, working in an assigned studio space.

M.F.A. students focus on a specific area of study while also being able to choose from a wide variety of learning experiences. The conceptual and ideological bases for artistic endeavors are explored through art history, graduate seminars, and critiques. The main goal of the M.F.A. program is to direct the M.F.A. student to explore, focus, and excel.

Through conceptual and ideological dialogue, as well as the availability of technical expertise, the M.F.A. student at Towson is directed toward thematic consistency. Contemporary art methodologies comprise the integration of new technologies, interdisciplinary approaches and multicultural influences, so the need to focus ideas within this climate is foremost in the mentoring of developing artists in the M.F.A. program.
